An introduction to inefficient behaviours: what they really mean

Ever noticed how tiny speed bumps at work, like preferred working styles or a miscommunication, can slow things down a bit? These are what we call "inefficiencies," and while they seem small, they can have a big impact.

Such inefficiencies, whether due to uncoordinated responsibilities, equipment issues, or employees intentionally focusing on less important tasks can have a significant impact on performance. But here's the kicker - these inefficiencies are not always a bad thing!

By reframing these inefficiencies not as obstacles but as catalysts for growth, we unlock a realm of possibilities. Just as a skilled jeweller sees a diamond in the rough, leaders like you can identify, understand, and shape these inefficiencies, transforming them into unique opportunities for development.

This eBook serves as a roadmap for a transformative journey. It's about harnessing the potential hidden in inefficiencies, helping your people grow, and building a fantastic team. Keep reading as we explore how you can turn inefficiencies into strengths for a dynamic, high-performing professional environment.

Inefficiency and its domino effect on teamwork

Have you thought about the ripple effect of unchecked inefficient behaviours in a team? It's like a faulty cog in a machine, disrupting the entire system. Beyond the evident decline in productivity and motivation, there's a less visible but equally damaging cost. Think of the increased absence rates, legal fees, recruitment costs, a drop in sales revenue, and, worst of all, potential harm to your brand reputation.

It's a steep price to pay for neglecting performance issues. So, how can you improve team dynamics?

- ✓ Clarify roles and responsibilities: Make sure every team member understands their specific roles and responsibilities. This helps foster accountability and improves efficiency.
- ✓ Resolve conflicts promptly: Don't let unproductive behaviours linger. Encourage open conversations and assist your team in finding solutions to issues that arise.
- ✓ Promote strong leadership: Support and encourage strong leadership within the team. You can facilitate this by providing leadership training and development programs.
- ✓ Continually assess performance: Frequently evaluate the team's performance and behaviours. Reinforce positive behaviours like collaboration, trust, and respect.
- ✓ Foster inclusivity: Establish a supportive and inclusive team culture. Value diversity and promote strong relationships among team members.
- ✓ Encourage communication: Promote open communication within the team. Ensure everyone is informed and feels their voice is heard.
- ✓ Diagnose the issues: Begin by evaluating team dynamics and having 1:1 discussions with employees. These individual interactions foster trust, facilitate candid feedback, and often reveal deeper insights, including common issues like weak leadership, lack of accountability, or disruptive behaviours.

Nurturing potential: The power of learning

As a leader, it's important to foster a growth mindset with your team members. Why? Because it helps turn hiccups into learning moments. When your team stumbles, remind them it's not about failing, it's about learning.

Give them feedback that coaches them rather than punishes them, and they'll continue to improve. This builds resilience, helps them to stay motivated, and gives them a positive view of personal development.

Creating a learning-friendly atmosphere is essential as it fosters continuous growth, enhances individual and team performance, and cultivates a culture of curiosity and adaptability, all key to organisational success in an ever-evolving business landscape.

So, how can you go about creating this culture of learning in your organisation?

- ✓ Promoting Continuous Learning: Foster a culture of curiosity through diverse initiatives like workshops, 'Lunch and Learn' sessions, and book clubs. These platforms encourage the exchange of knowledge and stimulate intellectual curiosity.
- ✓ Blending Learning Methods: Adapt to everyone's unique learning style by using a variety of teaching methods. From e-learning courses and one-on-one coaching, to group problem-solving and interactive webinars, keep the process exciting and inclusive.
- ✓ Empowering Subject Matter Experts: Encourage in-house experts to share their insights and mentor their colleagues. This practice harnesses internal knowledge and promotes a culture of peer-to-peer learning.
- ✓ Making Learning Fun: Inject elements of gamification into the learning process to keep it engaging. Use leaderboards, badges, or rewards to motivate employees and create a positive competitive environment.
- ✓ Providing Regular, Constructive Feedback: Embed constructive feedback into the fabric of the workplace. Regular feedback sessions, coupled with a clear action plan, can help employees continually evolve, thereby promoting a culture of continuous improvement. Check out our two blogs on feedback culture and how it can affect your team's performance.

Reframing inefficient behaviours into strengths

It can be a challenge when team members aren't reaching their potential. But it's a leader's job to not only identify these inefficiencies, but to guide team members towards turning these weaknesses into strengths. Here are some actionable tips to help you tackle this sensitive task.

- ✓ Spot Inefficiencies: Start by understanding the unique strengths and weaknesses of each team member through regular feedback sessions. Recognise that every individual is different; what may be an inefficiency in one context may well be a strength in another!
- ✓ Practice Safe Sharing: Create a safe space where everyone feels comfortable sharing their weaknesses without fear of judgement or negative repercussions. Remember, for this to be effective, it's important to lead by example and be honest about your inefficiencies and learning journey.
- ✓ Back Their Strengths: It's important to identify and support each team member's strengths. Reinforcing what they do well can boost confidence and engagement, which in turn can help them tackle their weaknesses more effectively.
- ✓ Encourage Experimentation: Embrace the idea of "learning by doing". Encourage team members to try new things and experiment with different approaches. This can help them discover new strengths and ways to transform their inefficiencies.
- ✓ Celebrate Progress: Reward progress, no matter how small. Positive reinforcement can go a long way in motivating team members to keep working on their inefficiencies. It can also build a more positive and productive workplace environment.

The roadmap to better performance

Performance Improvement Plans (PIPs) can serve as powerful tools when aiming to enhance your team's skills and productivity. PIPs emphasise setting attainable goals, comprehensive training, vigilant monitoring, and maintaining open channels of communication. By leveraging PIPs, you can strategically drive improvement within your team, taking their performance to the next level.

Let's walk through a 5-step process to get one going for your employees.

Identify performance issues - Learn to recognise the signals of struggling employees, whether it's decreased productivity, increased absences, or poor performance in specific areas. Understand when it's appropriate to implement an Employee Performance Improvement Plan (PIP).

To gauge if an Employee Performance Improvement Plan (PIP) is needed, regularly review an employee's work trends against team standards. If issues persist despite support, open communication, and training, a PIP might be the next step.

2

Establish performance standards - It's essential that the goals and standards you set are clear, achievable, and understood by the employee. Outline these specific objectives in a formal PIP document, ensuring they align with the employee's role and your organisation's expectations.

3

Provide support and training interventions - One of the main reasons employees fail to perform could be due to a lack of training or support. Identify areas where additional support, mentoring, or training could help the employee improve their performance.

4

Conduct regular check-ins - A PIP isn't a "set and forget" strategy. Regular check-ins and reviews are crucial to monitor progress, give feedback, and ensure the employee stays on track. This ongoing communication process helps the employee feel supported throughout their improvement journey.

5

Evaluate progress - Clearly outline the potential outcomes of the PIP, both positive and negative. If performance improves, the employee should understand what rewards they can expect.

On the other hand, they should also understand the potential repercussions if their performance doesn't improve. This clarity is crucial for maintaining transparency and ensuring the employee understands the significance of the PIP.
